Chapter 1 by -

The foggy streets bustled with people. Everyone going about their business, paying no heed to the figure shrouded in a deep blue cape.

Two piercing sapphire eyes darted back and forth among the passers-by. They peered from behind the stone columns of an ancient arch, which provided a shield against another's searching gaze.

The cloaked woman gathered up her dress and slipped across the crowded path and made her way into a cemetery. Her gaze stayed fixed upon one person as she quietly maneuvered around a large grave monument. From there, she reached her hand into the pocket of her cape, and carefully watched the man before her.

Chapter 2 by GuardianAscension

The man didn't seem to notice the woman, but she was deep in his trail, creeping close as she pulls out a knife. A smirk graces her lips. It's the perfect place for a murder. He won't survive.

The man glances back once, she hides behind a large gravestone.

"Hi Hello?" The man's voice is shaky.

She does a silent snicker, it's a little lighter.

She does a silent snicker, it's a little lighter. The man's next is to jumpstart

She hears the man approach the lathe gravestone, which she slips around to other direction. She takes a deep breath then sharply turns the corner and knocks the man to the ground with her knife harshly at his throat, "Scream and I'll dissect you now!" She yells at him in a whisper.

The man swallows his scream, trying to calm his heart, which would kill him if it would be beating any quicker.

She leans in close to him and slides her knife slowly, but swiftly across his neck, he gasps for air, but doesn't succeed. Tears fall from his eyes onto the moist ground.

Finally his heart stops beating, and her smirk disappears. She stands up, pulls the hood from her cloak over her head, and puts her knife back into her pocket, quickly walking away from the body. Someone will find it, but no one would know it was her. She does not exist to the world.

Chapter 3 by Bella Mae

She quietly slipped out of the way of individuals who seemed to think she didn't exist. There was no place in the world for a girl as her. She eyed a woman in front of her. This was a plum woman with brown eyes and blonde hair. She was perfect for her next victim. She stuck her hand into her pocket. She grasped the knife in her hand. She waited. The woman had her hand over her stomach. she looked like she was in pain. Perfect. She jumped out of her hiding place. She cornered the woman in a dark alley way. Then, a paper fell out of the pocket of the women's trench coat. She picked up. She opened the paper, it was an ultrasound of a small baby. She staggered away. She couldn't kill this woman. Perhaps it was a womanly instinct that made her care for this woman. Nobody knows, but the woman was free to go.

She walked away quickly glancing back to watch the woman disappear around the corner and out of sight. She pulled her cape closer around her self shivering from the coldness. She walked back into a shadow and then she was gone.

"Penny Blood. Have a seat," he commanded. Penny sat down in a small chair in front of a desk. Damien Lake was the only person she let tell her what to do.

Damien sat down in the large chair behind the desk. "Hello Penny. Before we began, know that I know everything about you. So don't try to keep any secrets. You were supposed to kill two people tonight. You only killed one. Why is that?"

Penny swallowed. She knew the AOA didn't tolerate failure. "I'm sorry Mr. Lake. I didn't have the strength to kill her," she confessed.

Damion leaned back in his chair. "You know as well as I do that lack of strength is no excuse for not completing an assignment."

"I know Mr. Lake. I won't be as weak next time," said Penny. Her hands were shaking. Would he allow her to stay in the academy?

"I usually am not this kind, Miss Blood, but because you are one of the best around here, I will let you continue. If you do this again though...well you know what happens. Now, go receive your next assignment."

"Thank you," was all she could say. Penny rose from her seat and disappeared into the shadow she had come from.

Chapter 6 by CMAW

Penny appeared in a pitch black forest from the shadow. The cold wind whisked her blonde hair in all directions and made her shiver. She didn't like it here, but it was the only place The Assigner would meet with people.

"Assigner, I'm here," she called out.

A cloaked figure appeared behind a tree. Wispy white hair floated near her face behind her red cape. She seemed to glide closer to Penny.

"I hear you didn't complete your assignment," a raspy voice. Penny nodded and looked down. It was strange.

"In that case, I have a challenge for you. Make someone your friend. Then kill them," The Assigner whispered, gliding even closer with a nasty sneer. Penny didn't like her before, and she hated her even more now. She wasn't going to fail though. In fact, she was going to succeed even more then she was challenged.

She looked up to her dark indigo eyes and smiled. "I won't kill one friend. I'll kill three," she said and went back to her shadow.

How she would do that, she didn't know. She had to do it though. Not just for her safety, but to prove to Mr. Lake that she was the best of the best. She was Penny Blood.
